

A program upon completion of its execution should return an exitcode to the operating system indicating an success/failure of its execution

1. if the program is returning "0" as an exitcode, it indicates successful completion
2. anything other than "0" is considered as a failure in execution.